Budgeting at Scale: Balancing Opportunity, Risk, and Reality in Global Events

Drawing on her experience as Seattle FIFA World Cup Organizing Committee Board Chair and former CEO of the 2018 Special Olympics USA Games, Beth Knox offers a behind-the-scenes look at the financial and risk management complexities of planning and executing large-scale global events. She will explore long-range budgeting, fundraising, governance, and real-time decision-making in environments defined by uncertainty, evolving assumptions, and significant operational exposure.

This keynote examines the balance between ambition and risk management – particularly the dynamic between leaders driving vision and those responsible for safeguarding sustainability and organizational resilience. Attendees will gain practical insight into contingency planning, strategy, governance, and decision-making frameworks that help organizations navigate uncertainty while achieving strategic objectives.

Beth will provide context on the magnitude of decisions involved in FIFA World Cup host city planning, followed by an interactive Q&A focused on risk, resilience, and leadership lessons applicable across corporate, nonprofit, and large-scale event environments.

From Chaos to Clarity: A Leadership Pathway for Digital Transformation

Executives expect risk leaders to forecast, influence, and advise. But how can you lead when you can't see? Most risk teams - especially in small and mid-sized organizations - still rely on manual or semi-manual processes, scattered spreadsheets, and opaque financial data that make strategic insight nearly impossible.

Using Tidewater's digital transformation journey as a case study, this session explores how the company converted fragmented claims and loss information into clear, defensible intelligence that strengthened operational decisions, enhanced underwriting conversations, and uncovered recoveries that would've otherwise been missed.

This is a practical, realistic pathway for bringing order to chaos, regardless of budget, claim volume, or organizational maturity. Attendees will leave with actionable strategies to improve visibility, elevate their leadership influence, and confidently guide their organizations through digital modernization.

The New Catastrophic Claim: Trends, Cost Drivers, and Risk Management Strategies

Catastrophic workers' compensation claims are changing in ways that directly impact how organizations manage risk and long-term cost. While frequency remains relatively stable, severity is rising, driven by medical advances that improve survival and extend life expectancy, as well as rising medical costs.

These shifts are turning more claims into lifetime exposures, creating greater volatility and pressure on program structures, retentions, and excess limits. This session will break down the key drivers behind rising severity and provide practical strategies for risk managers to better anticipate, finance, and manage high-severity claims.

High-Density Havoc: Managing Property and BI Risks in AI Data Centers

This session explores the rapid evolution of data centers into advanced AI processing centers and the critical role they play in supporting today's accelerating demand for artificial intelligence. Drawing on extensive experience in AI-related risk and infrastructure, the discussion examines how modern facilities differ fundamentally from traditional data centers – shifting from passive data storage to high intensity, always on processing environments. The presentation highlights key considerations such as power and energy supply, battery systems, engineering resilience, and the growing constraints around capacity as AI adoption expands nationwide.

The conversation also addresses the broader business and risk implications of AI infrastructure, including business interruption and contingent business interruption exposures that can ripple far beyond the data center itself. With real world observations from markets experiencing rapid data center growth, the session touches on the operational, economic, and community challenges tied to these facilities—from infrastructure strain and power demands to the cascading impact of outages on non-AI businesses. Designed as a focused, high-level discussion, this engagement provides insight into why AI driven processing centers represent a new frontier for risk, resilience, and strategic planning.

Power Under Pressure: Energy Volatility and the Evolving Landscape of Property Risk

Shifting energy supply dynamics, grid instability, extreme weather events, aging infrastructure, and the rapid transition to renewable power are redefining property risk exposure. Organizations are increasingly vulnerable to power interruption, equipment breakdown, contingent business interruption, and valuation challenges tied to energy dependency. This session examines how volatility in the global and regional power supply is impacting property underwriting, capacity, engineering requirements, and claims outcomes. Speakers will explore how insurers are evaluating energy resilience, backup systems, infrastructure reliability, and business continuity planning when underwriting property programs. Attendees will also gain insight into how power-related losses are being adjusted, where coverage disputes commonly arise, and how to better position their organizations for favorable underwriting and smoother claims resolution.

Disconnected data and manual processes limit visibility, slow decision-making, and create inefficiencies across claims operations. This moderated panel tackles those challenges head-on.

Sam Gabal of Origami Risk will lead a conversation with John Alley, Senior Risk Manager at Amazon, and Ian Kohler, Risk Claims Specialist at Port of Seattle. Together, they'll explore how leading organizations are operationalizing claims data to drive better visibility, efficiency, and decision-making across their programs.

Drawing on real-world experience, the panelists will share practical insights into breaking down data silos, streamlining claims workflows, and leveraging automation and connected systems. The discussion will also cover how modern technology is helping organizations improve collaboration, boost operational efficiency, and create more actionable visibility across teams.

Attendees will leave with concrete strategies for modernizing claims operations, improving workflow efficiency, and building a more connected and resilient approach to risk management.

Parametric Insurance in Action: Closing Coverage Gaps and Accelerating Recovery

Presented by:

Marshall Crane
AVP, Business Development

Peter Hallez
Risk Manager – Aurora Public Schools

As wildfire and earthquake risks continue to strain traditional insurance programs—especially in the Western U.S.—parametric solutions are emerging as a powerful complement to close critical coverage gaps. This session explores how parametric insurance can address “basis risk” created by exclusions, sublimits, and large deductibles, while also covering non-damage business interruption (NDBI) scenarios such as shutdowns from wildfire smoke, evacuation orders, or poor air quality.

We'll also examine parametric insurance as a liquidity tool, delivering rapid payouts that enable faster recovery compared to traditional claims processes. Attendees will leave with practical insights on integrating parametric strategies into their broader risk management approach.

How RIMS Public Policy Program is Addressing Political Risk

Legislative and regulatory developments are increasingly shaping organizations' risk profiles and insurance costs. From third-party litigation funding and nuclear verdicts to the upcoming expiration of the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act (TRIA), risk managers can no longer afford to view public policy issues as someone else's problem. Current advocacy priorities identified by RIMS include increasing transparency around third-party litigation funding, ensuring the ongoing funding of the National Flood Insurance Program, and preparing for future TRIA reauthorization efforts.

In this fast-paced session, attendees will receive a practical overview of the political issues most likely to impact their organizations and insurance programs. We will discuss what is changing, why it matters, and how risk professionals can become more informed and engaged advocates for their organizations and the profession.

AI Redefined by Risk: From Exposure to Accountability (A Practitioner's Field Guide to AI Governance in the Enterprises)

AI is moving from experimentation into enterprise decisions and operations. That shift creates a risk-management imperative: establish who is accountable, where controls operate, what evidence exists, and when intervention is required.

This keynote applies established risk disciplines to AI-enabled decisions and actions. Informed by the NIST AI Risk Management Framework, ISO/IEC 42001, and COSO Enterprise Risk Management, attendees will receive a practitioner-developed maturity diagnostic, consequence-based risk model, human-oversight guidance, and a practical action plan.

AI in Action: Transforming Claims Management Without Losing Control

This session looks ahead to an AI-driven future for claims. As robotics and intelligent machines redefine risk, liability, and exposure, the boundaries of risk are shifting, creating new challenges and opportunities. AI is not just another technology trend; it is a seismic shift creating tension between innovation and control, humans, and machines. With the pace of change we see in AI, it is easy to wait for the tide to calm down but waiting could mean losing competitive advantages. There are ways to get moving and still protect the enterprise from undue risk. While AI fuels economic growth, it also disrupts roles lacking empathy and judgment there are critical qualities in claims. Many organizations are racing to establish AI governance yet remain unprepared operationally. The panelists will outline four AI-readiness anchors: reinventing end-to-end workflows with frontline examiners; change readiness through cross functional Business/Operations/Tech/GTM alignment and a "sponsorship spine"; data quality and governance for reliable outcomes; and client readiness, with transparent choices about secure data use. Success in 2026 and beyond will require responsible experimentation, rethinking workflows, and aligning people, policy, and technology.

Better Explores Possibilities.

Pursuing Better Together is how Arch Insurance does business. We believe that insurance matters. We care about how it's done, and together with our partners, constantly pursue better ways of doing business.

Beyond the Algorithm: Strategies for Leveraging Generative AI and Governing Risk

Generative AI is no longer a futuristic concept – it's a disruptive force redefining enterprise risk. For insurers, brokers, and risk leaders, the rise of AI-generated content and decision-making introduces new forms of operational, safety, enterprise, reputational, legal, and strategic risk across the entire value chain. This high-impact session explores how risk and insurance professionals can anticipate, govern, and mitigate these evolving exposures. Combining industry-specific insights with clear frameworks, we'll address the AI risk landscape, best practices in AI oversight, and insurance considerations to empower organizations not just to survive, but to thrive in the age of generative AI.

Mental Health: from Awareness to Action

Mental Health from Awareness to Action equips participants with practical tools to respond effectively to mental health instances and connect individuals to help. This session moves beyond awareness by focusing on real-world intervention strategies, including how to start difficult conversations, reduce stigma, and provide immediate support in workplace and community settings. Attendees will learn to take confident, appropriate action when someone may be in crisis. Emphasis is placed on early intervention, empathy, and creating a culture where people feel safe seeking help. Participants will leave with actionable steps they can apply immediately to support others and contribute to a safer, more responsive environment.
